About Me

Dedicated undergraduate student majoring in Mathematics and Psychology, blending analytical rigor with an understanding of human behavior. Eager to apply my diverse skill set and academic background to contribute meaningfully to various fields.

Coding Projects

Currently, I am working on making a Linear Algebra calculator using the programming language, Java. I also have some minor side projects in progress that you can view on my GitHub.

Career Goal

I am aspiring to become a clinical psychologist. Eager to apply theoretical knowledge and gain practical experience in diagnosing and treating mental health disorders to positively impact the lives of clients.

Bibliography

Three different commands:
- A bold word made with the \textbf{}

- A red phrase made with the \textcolor{}{} command (the first argument is the color, the second one is the text).

Education

Attended Notre Dame Regional High School, where I actively participated in track and field and robotics. Progress bar skill sections ———

The command
`\customskills{Section title}{{},{},{}}{}` take three argument (the last one is optional). The first argument is the section title, e.g. `Languages`. The second macro argument is an array of couples made by words and float numbers separated by slashes, e.g. `{{Latin/4.3},{Greek/6}}`; the number of course represents how much the skill ability is high. This array separator is a comma. Note that the array order is reversed: in the output list created by the example above has the word "Greek" before "Latin".
